Seeing the City

The city tours outlined in the following pages are so planned that they may be conveniently undertaken on foot, or by “jaunting car” which is still a favoured method of sightsseeing.

Public transport is, of course, available in all parts of the city. The green buses in the Dublin area are operated by the C.I.E. (Córas Iompair Éireann) whose City offices are at 59 Upper O’Connell Street, just north of Nelson Pillar, where indexed up-to-date timetables and other information may be obtained.

Trams (7 and 8) for Blackrock, Dun Laoghaire and Dalkey, and Trams (14 and 15) for Dartry and Terenure, start from the south side of Nelson Pillar. Cross-city buses, all running through O’Connell Street, connect the northern and southern suburbs. The principal cross-city services are from Donnybrook to Phoenix Park (9 and 10), Glasnevin-Clonskea (11), Cabra-Palmerston Park (12), Whitehall-Terenure and Rathfarnham (16 and 17), Glasnevin-Rialto (19 and 19A).

Other buses start from the Quays and Streets near O’Connell Bridge—from Burgh Quay and College Street for Bray, Enniskerry, Delgany and other southern seaside and country places; from Eden Quay for Swords, Malahide and other northerly destinations; from Aston’s Quay for Maynooth, Lucan and elsewhere to the west. The services to Whitechurch in the Dublin mountains and to Tallaght (and Bohernabreena) start from Rathgar and Terenure, respectively.
TOUR No. 1.—AROUND COLLEGE GREEN, ST. STEPHEN’S GREEN and MERRION SQUARE

College Green is an appropriate centre from which to start any tour of Dublin. This busy junction where four streets meet is flanked by the fine curved facade of the old Parliament House (now the Bank of Ireland) and by the long frontage of Trinity College. The three statues by Foley, the Irish sculptor, at once attract attention. In the centre, with upraised hand, is Henry Grattan—standing close by the building which so often resounded with his eloquence. Inside the College railings are the statues of two illustrious Trinity men, Edmund Burke and Oliver Goldsmith.

Leaving College Green we proceed up Grafton Street, Dublin’s most fashionable shopping centre, to St. Stephen’s Green, a pleasantly laid-out public park. The streets which lie just off the Green offer many points of interest, and may be conveniently explored.

Emerging through the south-eastern gate, we reach Earlsfort Terrace, where stands University College. In the Council Chamber of this building were held the historic debates on the Anglo-Irish Treaty during the winter of 1921-22.

Returning through St. Stephen’s Green we emerge through a side gate just opposite Dawson Street on the northern side. On the right here are the Mansion House, the Royal Irish Academy, and St. Ann’s Church, in which Felicia Hemans, the poetess, is interred. Just beyond St. Ann’s Church is Molesworth Street, which leads directly to Kildare Street.

The large building which faces Molesworth Street is Leinster House, meeting-place of the Dáil and Senate. On the right of the quadrangle is the National Museum, while an exactly similar building on the left houses the National Library. Facing the Museum are the impressive new offices of the Department of Industry and Commerce. At the foot of Kildare Street we enter Leinster Street, passing the premises of the Kildare Street Club. On the exterior of this building may be observed some fine stone-carving by the famous O’Shea brothers.

Passing through Clare Street we come to Merrion Square, once Dublin’s finest residential quarter, noted for its lovely Georgian houses. The west side of Merrion Square is for the most part occupied by Leinster Lawn. To the left of Leinster Lawn is the Natural History Museum; the impressive building which flanks the other side is the National Art Gallery.

Just off Merrion Square is Upper Merrion Street, where our attention is at once attracted by the extensive block which contains the College of Science and the Government Buildings.

TOUR No. 2.—OLD DUBLIN—THE CASTLE, CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL and ST. PATRICK’S CATHEDRAL

Leading westward from College Green is Dame Street. On the left, almost opposite the Olympia Theatre, is Dublin Castle, an edifice of great historic interest. Adjacent to it is the City Hall. The end of Dame Street merges into Cork Hill and Lord Edward Street, which are situated on the eminence where Dublin had its earliest beginnings. In Christchurch Place stands the historic Christ Church Cathedral, which contains the tomb of Strongbow and other interesting antiquities.

The long, crooked thoroughfare which winds westward from the Castle was the main street of the ancient walled city of Dublin. The different sections of it now bear various names. Just beyond Christchurch Place is High Street, merging into Cornmarket, where stands St. Audoen’s Church. Continuing westward one enters Thomas Street, which recalls so many memories of Irish patriots. Still further west is James’s Street, where (on right) is situated the visitors’ entrance to Guinness’s Brewery, the largest establishment of its kind in the world. (Visitors are conducted through the Brewery hourly on week-days from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. On Saturdays there is only one tour, beginning at 11 a.m.)

Just off James’s Street, in Bow Lane, is St. Patrick’s Hospital, where may be seen a very fine collection of relics of Dean Swift. Returning to Christchurch Place, we turn right into Werburgh Street, where stands the interesting old CHURCH OF ST. WERBURGH. Near here, at No. 9 Hoey’s Court (now demolished), was born Jonathan Swift. For the last thirty-two years of his life he was Dean of ST. PATRICK’S CATHEDRAL, which may be viewed from the foot of Werburgh Street. A visit to the Cathedral should not be missed. It contains the graves of Swift and his beloved “Stella”; various relics preserved here recall centuries of history.

This district is full of interest for the sightseer and the student. In the Cathedral Close is the remarkable MARSH’S LIBRARY, and just across the road is the Deanery. Leaving the environs of the Cathedral, we may go through Kevin Street, passing (on left) the Civic Guard Barracks.

From Kevin Street one may turn left into Bishop Street, at the further end of which is JACOB’S BISCUIT FACTORY. Its products have a world-wide reputation. Jacob’s Factory was one of the strategic points seized by the Irish Volunteers during the Insurrection of 1916, the garrison here being under the command of Thomas MacDonagh.

Continuing along Peter’s Row, we enter Whitefriars Street and observe, on the right, the Carmelite Friary. In the fine Chapel attached to the Friary there is preserved an interesting specimen of mediaeval art—an image of the Blessed Virgin.

Bearing right along Whitefriars Street we emerge into Aungier Street almost opposite the house in which Thomas Moore was born (No. 12). Aungier Street leads into South Great George’s Street, at the foot of which we turn right into Dame Street and return to College Green.

TOUR No. 3.—ALONG THE QUAYS—
O’CONNELL BRIDGE, O’CONNELL STREET and PARNELL SQUARE

Northwards from College Green is Westmoreland Street, which leads to O’Connell Bridge. To the right as we leave College Green is College Street, which leads directly to Pearse Street. Here, on the right, is the Queen’s Theatre. Directly opposite is the central FIRE BRIGADE STATION.

Proceeding through Tara Street towards the river, we emerge at Butt Bridge. It will be seen that one’s view of the CUSTOM HOUSE (perhaps Dublin’s finest public building) is obscured by the overhead railway-bridge. But by walking a short distance along George’s Quay, to the right, an uninterrupted view may be obtained across the river.

Returning along Burgh Quay, the chief objects of interest are the Corn Exchange and O’Connell’s Conciliation Hall, now the home of the Irish Press.

At the junction of five busy streets, we reach O’CONNELL BRIDGE, a splendid three-arched structure with a span of 51 yards. It has an unusual distinction in the fact that its width is greater than its length.

O’Connell Street runs northward from the Bridge to the rising ground near the Rotunda. It is generally recognised as one of the finest streets in Europe. Though its architecture is almost completely modern, the perspective of this spacious and impressive thoroughfare pays tribute to the men who planned it almost two centuries ago.

Between O’Connell Bridge and Butt Bridge, on the northern side of the river, runs Eden Quay. Just off Eden Quay, to the left, is Marlborough Street, where stands the ABBEY THEATRE. Near Butt Bridge is the crescent-shaped Beresford Place, at the corner of which is situated LIBERTY HALL. Here was printed the famous “Proclamation of the Irish Republic,” in 1916.

Coming back along Eden Quay we turn into Marlborough Street, passing the Abbey Theatre. On the left, just beyond the intersection with Talbot Street, is the CATHOLIC PRO-CATHEDRAL. The buildings opposite the Cathedral are the Central Model Schools. On the right is Tyrone House, one of the most ancient and interesting of Dublin’s Georgian Houses. It was built for the Earl of Tyrone in 1740, and is now used as offices by the Ministry of Education.

Continuing along Marlborough Street, we cross Parnell Street before entering North Great George’s Street. Many of the fine Georgian houses in this street have fallen into a dilapidated state.

Turning left, along Great Denmark Street, we pass—on the right—BELVEDERE HOUSE, now a Jesuit College.
It is one of Dublin’s finest Georgian houses, and exhibits beautiful examples of the stucco work of the period. Continuing, we emerge into Parnell Square, opposite the Abbey Church. The fine houses in the Square are worth examination and a visit should be paid to Charlemont House (on the north side of the Square) to view the Municipal Gallery of Modern Art.

Passing down the east side, we leave the Rotunda buildings and the Gate Theatre on our right and enter O’Connell Street. On the left of the street will be noticed a fine block of buildings in a homogeneous style. This block—which includes the Gresham Hotel, the Savoy Cinema, and the Irish Tourist Association’s Offices—represents portion of the extensive rebuilding which took place after the troubled period of 1916-23.

Just beyond the Nelson Pillar, on the right, is the General Post Office, headquarters of the Irish Volunteers during the 1916 Insurrection. Crossing O’Connell Bridge again, it is worth pausing to admire the vista of Dublin’s inland quays, stretching westward with the irregular silhouette of the city rising against the sky. A short walk through Westmoreland Street takes us back to our starting point at College Green.

TOUR No. 4.—PHENIX PARK, ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, GLASNEVIN CEMETERY and BOTANIC GARDENS

Starting again from College Green, we walk along Westmoreland Street and across O’Connell Bridge to the corner of Bachelor’s Walk. If Phoenix Park be the immediate objective, a bus may be taken from this point. The Four Courts, however, should not be missed. It is situated on Inns Quay (penny bus-ride from O’Connell Bridge), but a better general view of this fine building may be obtained by crossing Father Mathew (formerly Whitworth Bridge) and viewing it from the other side of the river.

Returning to the northern quays, we enter Church Street, just beyond the Four Courts. Here, on the left, is St. Michan’s Church, whose Vaults (Adm., 1s.; Parties, 6d. per person), have the strange property of preserving the dead from decay.

Retracing our footsteps towards the river, we continue our journey, passing the house on Arran Quay (No. 12), in which Edmund Burke was born. A little further along, on the right, is the extensive Collins Barracks, while Guinness’s Brewery and Kingsbridge Railway Station stand just across the river. We now enter Parkgate Street and approach the main entrance to the Phoenix Park, one of the most spacious and beautiful in the world.

Having explored the Park and visited the People’s Gardens and the Zoological Gardens, we emerge through the gateway which leads to the North Circular Road. Going towards this exit from the Zoo, we see on our left a large group of buildings, the Garda Sìothchána (Civic Guards) Dépôît.

Outside the gate we may take a bus (No. 9 or 10) towards the city, passing en route the Dublin Metropolitan Cattle Market. Further on, at the junction with Cabra Road, is the magnificent St. Peter’s Church, under the care of the Vincentian Fathers.

Shortly after passing the Church we alight, and board a bus bound for Glasnevin (No. 19). Getting off at Finglas Road, it is but a short walk to Glasnevin Cemetery, burial-place of many illustrious Irishmen. The cemetery is laid out with great taste and many impressive monuments are to be seen. Most conspicuous is the Monument to Daniel O’Connell, the “Liberator,” which is a replica of an Irish Round Tower and rises 160 feet above the crypt containing his remains. Just to the right is the Gothic Memorial Chapel to O’Connell, designed by Dr. Petrie.

On the west side of the mortuary chapel is the grave of Parnell, which is surrounded by railings and surmounted by a large block of Wicklow granite. Nearby is a statue to Barry Sullivan, the famous Shakespearian actor. The tomb of John Philpot Curran should also be seen.

North-east of the O’Connell Monument is The Republican Plot in which are the remains of many I.R.B. leaders and of those patriots who took part in the National struggle, 1916-21. Nearby are buried Michael Collins, Arthur Griffith and Kevin O’Higgins, three of the leading figures in the establishment of the Irish Free State in 1922.
Leaving the cemetery, we return to the bus-stop and take a bus (No. 19) to the BOTANIC GARDENS, which are reached within a few minutes.

After a survey of the Gardens we board a city-bound bus. The route lies through Glasnevin, over the Canal Bridge, and past "Doyle's Corner." As Berkeley Road is reached we see, on left, in Eccles Street, the fine MATER MISERICORDIAE HOSPITAL, the largest in Dublin. Just opposite the hospital, at the junction of Eccles Street and Berkeley Road, there stands a fine Memorial Cross dedicated to the Four Masters.

A little further along Berkeley Road is St. JOSEPH'S CATHOLIC CHURCH. Shortly after this we turn into North Frederick Street and, passing along the east side of Parnell Square, arrive at the Nelson Pillar in O'Connell Street.
